800 ARE UNINJURED

NORTH DIGHTON, AUG. 2.—Scores of employees of the Mount Hope Finishing company's factory, the largest in this town, narrowly escaped death or serious injury today when the chemical department building was blown up by an explosion of acids. Fortunately the explosion occurred during the lunch hour. Most of the employees were returning to the factory from their homes at the time.

The force of the explosion scattered the timbers for hundreds of yards. The company employs 800.

ENGINEER RESCUES WOMAN AND CHILD

Leaps From Locomotive Into River at Cottage Farms,
Then Rides Away.

An engineer of the Boston & Albany Railroad saved two lives yesterday afternoon when he stopped a rapidly moving train near the Cottage Farm bridge shortly after 4 o'clock and dived into the Charles River after Mrs. Catherine Noonan and her seven weeks old baby, who were struggling in the water.

Mrs. Noonan's husband is janitor of the St. Alphonsus A. A. Boat Club on the Allston side of the Charles River. He was away for the afternoon and Mrs. Noonan went out after a drifting boat.

As Mrs. Noonan was reaching out to catch hold of the drifting boat she lost her balance and fell into the water. Her boy's call for help was drowned out in the roar of an inbound express.

The engineer shut off his throttle and applied the brakes. Even before the train came to a handstill the engineer div into the water, a distance of fifteen fe and grasped Mrs. Noonon as she was g ing down. He got aboard his engine a fede away before his name was learned.

Intruder Flying.
Mrs. George A. Nobil of No. 5 Valley, Linn, yesterday had a hand to her battle with a robber who demanded money of her in her home, and not only defeated the purposes of her assailant but sent him flying into the woods badly and bleeding from his wounds.
Mrs. Nobil refused and the robber struck at her with a club. She dodged the blow

He regained his feet and the lot of women again closed with him and together they fought their way to the door and rolled down the steps. Mrs. Nobil was fighting with nails and teeth, and she had a great jagged wound in the robber's back which covered her with blood.

DELEGATES READY TO GREET COLONEL

Roosevelt Convention to Be "Lily White"; Johnson or Wright May Get 2d Place.

CHICAGO, Aug. 3.—With the sound of coming bands of the Bull Moose party giving in intensity, developments are thick and fast to-day in the camp of progress, the delegates to the Roosevelt Convention are ready to greet the new party.

Colonel Theodore Roosevelt will arrive in the morning, and will be met with a salute and a cordial welcome. He will be met by the delegates to the Roosevelt Convention, and will be met by the delegates to the Roosevelt Convention.

Second Place on Ticket. Aside from the meeting of the presidential committee, the greatest interest centered around the proposition as to who should be named as the vice-presidential candidate. Three names were suggested.

Strong Claims for Wright. The men who are urging L. B. Wright or Tennessee have their claims for his selection upon the fact that he served as a Confederate during the Civil War.

"ROOSEVELT LED BY DIVINE WISDOM." SAYS OSCAR STRAUS. BUFFALO, N. Y., Aug. 3.—The State convention of the National Progressive party, held here today, elected as delegates to the national convention in Chicago, Oscar Straus of New York, Miss Mary L. Butler of New York and Chauncey J. Hamlin of Buffalo.

Senator Ambassador Straus, in a speech, made several points at President Taft and declared "Colonel Roosevelt is being led by divine wisdom." Former Lieutenant Governor of New York Timothy L. Woodruff was appointed chairman of the New York delegation to the Chicago convention.

in Hospital.

With only two gas, seven inches in length and extending inward to the bones of his neck, and another gas three inches long and to the bone of his right leg, the man died at the Western Maryland Hospital in a corner of the room. Theodore Lewis, a sailor from Baltimore, would probably recover from the injuries alleged to have been inflicted by a fellow inmate, John J. Harp, of Harper's Ferry, Va., yesterday morning.

According to the story told the police, the two men were in the cell of the Western collier Melrose, anchored at the dock of the New England Gas & Coke Co. when the trouble started. The two men were quarreling and the Melrose's shooting caps until the other morning hours yesterday.

When the Melrose, owed Ocular City Gas as the result of the plying "When the Melrose was shot at, the Melrose started to draw a gun, exclaiming, "I'll

NEVER A TEAR FROM BOY HURT UNDER CAR

Gamely Tells Name and Address, Though Perhaps Fatally Hurt.

Seven-year-old Jacob Guberman of 1015 Fay street, South End, was so badly hurt by a trolley car last night, that the doctors said he probably would die, he never cried and lapsed his name and address and the names of his father and mother. The policemen who rode into the ambulance with him to the City Hospital where his name is on the dangerous list, say he was the gamest little chap they ever saw. Patrolman Frank known as "Good-natured Frank," was one of the biggest men in the department, lifted little Jacob from under his car.

The boy clung to the policeman, and as the hospital insisted on telling who he was. He caught the policeman's hand. He said he didn't feel very well on his injured side, and asked him if he wouldn't carry him over on his cot.

"Don't leave me till pups and mamma come, will you?" said he, and with tear-dimmed eyes the giant in uniform cried "You bet I won't, my boy!"

"Now put me to sleep, 'cause I'm so funny," said Jacob, and with another feeble pressure of the fingers he lapsed into unconsciousness from which the surgeon fear he never may awake.

When he awoke he made out his surroundings with difficulty.

Little Jacob was with his mother and grandmother. They were crossing Washington street never at all without a policeman held high in the air when a car approached. The mother pulled one war and the child broke from her and ran the other. But he was not

The corner is one of the busiest in the city on a Saturday night. Several thousand persons watched while the boy was taken from under the car, and a demonstration against the motorman was started. It was stopped by the police. The motorman, Norman Brown, was taken to the Delham Street station to await the result of the child's injuries. Brown has been a motorman seven months. Mrs. Gubernan's screams could be heard four blocks before she swooned. She is in a critical condition at her home.

R. H. WHITE CO.

SAYS WIFE SHOULD BE TREASURY HEAD

Mrs. Reimer, Helpmeet of Boston's Presidential Candidate, Describes Ideal Home.

BOSTON has a candidate in the field for President of the United States. He is a Democrat or a C. O. P. standstill or a Bull Moose. He belongs to the Socialist-Labor party. His name is Arthur E. Reimer, and he is not a stump speaker, he lives with his wife and child at No. 128 H Street, South Boston. Reimer, a tall, thin, thirty-five year old man, is making speeches to advance his candidacy on the Socialist Labor ticket, and Mrs. Reimer and their child are at home. The wife, however, is her duty to remain at home, she is not getting any of the White House publicity that her husband is getting. She is the only woman in the White House as the first lady in the land she would continue to keep her home and work, she says.

Idle Women Useless.
"Idle women, whether it is out of the White House, are not to society in general," she said.
"I am making a pie for this evening," she said, "my pie is for the people." "Don't you think this type of home is better?" asked the reporter. Mrs. Reimer, who is a housewife, says that she is not getting any of the White House publicity that her husband is getting. She is the only woman in the White House as the first lady in the land she would continue to keep her home and work, she says.

In Palace, Astor's Widow Hopes for Son In Cottage, Mrs. Geraghty Awaits Heir Two Heart Romances of Millions

TWO WOMEN OF ROMANCE—A MILLIONAIRE'S WIDOW AND A CHAUFFEUR'S WIFE

Mrs. "Jack" Geraghty, millionaire's daughter, now a poor man's wife, who awaits on heir to the Astor millions.

Baby of Rich Julie French That Was, Will Inherit Only Love in a Cottage.
NEW YORK, Aug. 3.—The Astor mansion at No. 40 Fifth avenue, Mrs. John Jacob Astor, widow of Colonel Astor, is awaiting the arrival of her heir. She hopes the newcomer will be a son. In case the arrival will become heir to $3,000,000 according to the father's will.

With the once noted specialist in New York and half a dozen nurses, Mrs. Astor's mansion is surrounded with all the comforts that great wealth can command. The beautiful young widow determined that the infant should rest the light in the family mansion which her husband bequeathed to her.

She returned to her home a few days ago after a long visit to her father and mother, Mr. and Mrs. William H. Forster, at Bernardsville, N. J.

Her health, which was shaken by her anguish when her husband was lost with the Titanic, is greatly improved. She is robust, healthy and strong. Her physicians fear no complications.

The nursery in the Astor home is ready. Having several to her disposal. In this nursery Vincent Astor, who inherited the bulk of the Astor millions, played the bulk.

As he grew older the great fortune was divided into a suite for him. Now his possessions have vanished, the room is again a nursery, the perfection of ventilation and sanitation.

Vincent Astor is abroad with his mother, Mrs. Astor. Vincent Astor is abroad with his mother, Mrs. Astor. Vincent Astor is abroad with his mother, Mrs. Astor.

"Their Only Child" A New Comic Series

Artist George McManus, Author of the "Newlyweds," Joins Sunday American Staff.

The comic section of the Sunday AMERICAN—rich as it is in humor and in the form of the article—is to be well richer. George McManus, the comic artist, famous as the creator of the "Newlyweds," is now added to the staff of Illustration.

McManus will furnish series of funny pictures for the Sunday AMERICAN titled "Their Only Child." This series will display all that irresistible humor for which McManus is famous.

It will appear to old and young and especially to parents of young and precocious offspring. As all offspring are precious, it will be a series of "The Only Child" in the Sunday AMERICAN.

The addition of Mr. McManus to the AMERICAN's staff of comic artists adds one more to the almost immeasurable list of famous features of Boston's favorite newspaper.

Another comic section of the Sunday AMERICAN is to be in the near future, headed by the cartoonist of the Boston AMERICAN, Mr. McManus to the staff of artists means will more largely for Sunday readers.

CHARLES K. FOX BURIED.
1,000 Employees Attend Funeral of Haverhill Manufacturer.

Haverhill, Aug. 3.—One thousand employees of the late Charles K. Fox, shoe manufacturer, filed past the casket containing his body at the funeral this afternoon from the Fox home on Arlington square. Delegations attended from the New England Shoe & Leather Manufacturers' Association, from the Boston Art Club and from the local shoe manufacturers' association.

The Rev. John A. Hayes (Catholic) and the Rev. Arthur J. Devlin (Protestant) conducted the service. Burial was in Lindens cemetery.

DEWEY'S PRIZE SOLD.
Venezuela Buys Isla de Cuba, Captured in Manila Bay.

The pinhead Isla de Cuba, captured by Admiral Dewey at Manila, has been sold to Venezuela. With all guns and equipment it was bought for $27,250. What Four Notable Bar Harbor Women Say About Keeping Automobiles Off the Island.

Mrs. Edward B. McLean, mother of the $100,000,000 baby you read so much about, says:

The Bar Harbor season is as gay as it's ever been. The roads in Bar Harbor are not fitted for autos.

Mrs. James L. Putnam, prominent Boston society women, says:

There is plenty of diversion for those who look for it. Dinners, dances, luncheons, etc., all the time.

Mrs. Christian Barney-Hemrick, mother of the Miss Laura Barney whose statue of her sister, Miss Natalie Clifford Barney, so upset Washington society, says:

We come to Bar Harbor for quiet. There is sufficient amusement for all. Walking is one of our most delightful diversions. We use canes at Bar Harbor because we walk so much. We don't want automobiles here. It's a relief to get away for a while from their noise and odor.

Miss Juliette Nickerson, State Agent for the Protection of Children and Animals, says:

it?" And the concert was just about to begin when she was called to take her picture again. "Oh, dear, I don't have time to get ready," cried Vinson, but she was forced to draw her forehead to be snapped with the light. "I don't want to be wanted to take his mother's hand," she gave up. "I'll be there if I can't. I'll be there if I can't." Finally until the process was over and he was safely bundled off for his quick change.

"There are a great many people who complain about Star Harbor being too small," said the speaker. "But they have nothing else to talk about."

[illegible][illegible]

I later asked the head of the police department what was the matter with her husband, and if he didn't think they should have automobiles later. He said he was a dandy looking man, but he let me know that if he said he wanted autos there the carriage drivers would be angry. So he said he would be happy to let me know what he thought.

[illegible]

Mrs. Hemmick is mother of the Miss Laura Barney, whose statue of her sister, Miss Natalie, so upset Washington society that the police ordered it

"I told Mr. Hirschman I was, absolutely positive to agree down to her her job. For her here is a senior and I'm mounted and she is always looking at me. I started with the other things and she always other things and we finally came to the subject of automobiles."
 "I asked if for one, shouldn't want driven at her. Her husband here for quite and real. There is not doubt driven for all."
 "It is with a relief to be free from the idea and the idea of a woman."
 That is one of the most precious and refreshing things about this "I suddenly found none waiting as a consequence and her husband was to help a walking repair."
 "It is known that she is much that they all carry on," I asked.
 "That, I presume, must be it."
 And Mr. Hirschman said he more of the things for the play.

MRS. JIMMY PUTMAN
LIVENS THEM UP A BIT.
 Mrs. James Lowell Putman, who was giving a luncheon at the clubhouse, and who was having a small time getting her guests together, informing them that she was having building the matter with her husband.
 "Well, I think every one has been as we as they have ever been. There is plenty of directions here for those who look for it."

"My most important case?" Deputy Superintendent Joseph Duran, now just plain Joseph Duran, sat in his office at police headquarters. The question seemed to puzzle him. It really seemed to amuse him, for this grizzled old veteran of the Civil War was just rounding out nearly forty-three years of life in the police department. He was to pass out of official life in two hours.

The mid-mannered man, who doesn't look any more like the fiction writer's detective than he does an actor, answered in the affirmative. "Who's interested in the affairs of the police?" he began, "hangs on the neck of the politician. When I entered the department the Mayor and a board of three Aldermen had control of the department. Naturally the police have been the tool of politicians ever since. The politicians controlled the destinies of the men. That scandal in New York could have been avoided if the police were taken out of the hands of politicians. In Boston we had a board of five members each year. New York City has a five member board. Most of them can be traced in gambling and the other causes directly and indirectly brought about from gambling."

[illegible]

The decrease was a surprise, because of large appropriations for the new Home School building and the Town Hall. It was thought the rate would be increased.

ROMANCE OF WHIPPLE "HOUSE OF SEVEN BATHS" IN LEXINGTON

Beautiful Estate on Which the Hotel King Spent Over $250,000 Bought by Former Chicago Tailor

THE "HOUSE OF THE SEVEN BATHS" AT LEXINGTON—SCENES WITHIN THE WHIPPLE MANSION AND SOME OF THE BUILDINGS AND GROUNDS SURROUNDING IT.

Splendors of the Place Enjoyed by Thousands of Visitors.

Italian Gardens, Lawns and Walks the Delight of All Who Journeyed.

WHEN JOHN REED WHIPPLE, the hotel king of Boston, died as he often did at the famous "House of the Seven Baths" in Lexington and read his will, it was about 1890. He must have been a very old man, for he had lived a long and eventful life.

His house with seven baths, the "House of the Seven Baths," was a place of great beauty and interest. It was a place where many of the great men of the country had lived, and it was a place where many of the great events of the country had taken place.

The "House of the Seven Baths" stands today in East Lexington, a monument to the splendor of the past and a reminder of the greatness of the Whipple family.

added was low and was covered with rocks old alms that had stood there neglected for years; great flower-covered arbors, added to the beauty of the place.

In making that rough land into what is now the most beautiful and fertile garden, and a farm, it cost Mr. Whipple $250,000.

It was Mr. Whipple's greatest joy to get away from the bustle of the city and to seek the seclusion of the quiet country estate. There he took his friends, who enjoyed good things to eat and drink, and played long drives between stately Why Miss Morris sold.

Whipple's estate was the epitome of the great and the good. But that was not all. It was a place where the great and the good were to be found.

THE STORY OF GEORGE HELM--By David Graham Phillips

"You see," said Helm, "I'm not on your side—the buttered side. I'm on the under side where there isn't any butter. Anyhow, I've no use for a wife—especially such a wife as that sort of woman would be. And she—who wouldn't want me as a husband if I was the best man on earth."

prised them all—including the managers and an heiress, a charming, delicate creature, whom he told he wasn't meant to be a man. She laughed differently and proved it).

—And women—who see that life is not an obstacle to their own lives, but the commonest interest in it everywhere else. They like melting and melting, and troubleless and troubleless, and are not afraid to give to street boys and patrolmen the literature of sleep. They are as generous as the sun, and as generous as their own eyes and deceptions.

—to marry for love alone.

There was not a little of this in the life of the late Harry Harned, and the interesting boss of the Milled o' Water was in a sentimental mood when he was in a gentlemanly conversation with George H. Cleveland, George Hearn, the lean and lank combed-over man who presided over the Democratic secretariat, the Democratic State House, Hissling, had divorced in the past, and who was now a confirmed bachelor to the notorious—(that is, famous)—lumber king and Senator, a man who was so famous for his "big ideas" of all kinds but helplessly dependent upon the culture of the times. "I don't see any harm in what you are going for in marriage," said "the Ideas." A few years ago, he had married a woman, and the two appeared to Harned's taste of the sentimentally romantic.

"I don't see any harm in what you are going for, all for Harry never did anything that wasn't a move in his career," said Harned. "I don't see any harm in what you are going for, all for Harry never did anything that wasn't a move in his career," said Harned.

Harned had brought Helen and Miss Cleveland together at his home in the city, and he had been so successful in his endeavor that it soon became a habit for him to go to the city and see Helen. "I don't see any harm in what you are going for, all for Harry never did anything that wasn't a move in his career," said Harned.

There was something peculiar in the relation, something unwarranted by the facts of the case, and it was not long before the two were married.

He shook his head slowly. "Well—I must be going." With a sudden change to a look of terrific power; "If I stay here a minute longer I'll not be able to keep my hands off you."

"Why should you go?" said she, boldly. Her glowing heart told her it was no time for trifling, for suddenly pretense of coyness. "Why should you

"No man ever made me feel but you," she went on. "I belong to you. If you cast me off—"

He had her in his arms—not because of what she had said but because he could not withstand her no longer. "I've gone crazy again," he said, as he kissed her—as she kissed him—"but you know as well as I do that we can't be anything to each other."

"Take me, George," she said. "I'll be what you want. You can teach me. I'll learn. Don't shut affection and love out of your life. You can't be half the man without them that you'll be with them. Oh, you don't under-

"I know we can't marry right away," she went on. "I've got a lot to do first. You are poor in one way, and I in another. We're got to wait."

"I must get to work. I've got to hurry things. You understand, you're entirely free until I'm able to come for you!"

"If it helps you to think so," she answered. "But—I'm not that kind of a girl, George."

A look of tenderness flooded her and he said: "I don't mean that. Of course you aren't. You're mine."

And she was crying with happiness. Saylor understood so soon as he saw her face. And he felt that he had won.

"He shall be the next Governor of this State," Saylor said to himself.

Sox Buy Pitcher
ANN ARBOR, Mich., Aug. 1 (AP)—Red Sox manager Sam Rice announced today he had purchased pitcher Tom Candiotti from the Detroit Tigers for $100,000. Candiotti, 26, has pitched in the National League since 1984. During his career, Candiotti has lost only one game out of the 100 in which he has pitched.

Experience Proves Stronger Than Temptation to 'Butt In' and Affairs of American League Pace-makers Show Wisdom of Outsiders Keeping Out—Past Failures Redeemed by Present Success

By W. J. Macbeth.

LET me introduce James R. McAlleer, president of the Boston American League. Here is one of the most remarkable men of baseball history. He is remarkable because he appreciates the honorable dignity of his position as a magnate. He keeps his hands entirely free from the playing end of the Red Sox and thereby sets an example that would profit almost all the club presidents of the major league.

There is naturally great temptation for club owners to tangle. They say quite rightly, "It's my money, and I'm going to have my say." Now that however, the success of the major league baseball leaders are hand-cuffed and manacled before they assume a leadership.

Club presidents and big stockholders are the real managers. They control with the club the money of the league. The new man in the big show perfectly qualified to offer advice to the manager.

John M. Stahl, president of the Boston Red Sox, is a true executive. He has been in the business for many years as one of the most remarkable executives of any team.

McAlleer knows baseball from every angle. But in knowing this, he knows the president's position is a true executive one. He is the man who has the right to be heard and who has the right to be heard.

John T. Stahl, the retired president, had always "butted in" on his manager. He figured to do so again this season, for he was one of the stockholders. McAlleer wanted John Stahl as a first baseman.

Early Outlook Story. He had to offer the management to way I learned from the leading business in Chicago. Then on the side, Stahl demanded a chance to buy a new block of stock for himself.

The complications that that sort of combination led to were more numerous than any. Every sharp prediction a year ago in Boston, Chicago, and New York, the possibility right up to the back, no one could see how the brain would come out of the business, with all these head-banging heads.

Why didn't the expected outcome break? John T. Stahl was the manager. He had the right to be heard and who has the right to be heard. He had the right to be heard and who has the right to be heard.

With McAlleer's case so strikingly in mind, it is a good idea that he wouldn't have delivered the goods in the same conditions. In any case, the flow was drawing a red picture of the first time since 1905.

Massachusetts Drops to Eighth Place with 42,000 Registered Cars.

While the growth of the automobile in America is universally regarded as one of the most remarkable features of the world's commercial progress, few persons have any definite idea of the exact figures which represent this amazing industry. In successive years it amounts to, not only the public, but the manufacturers themselves.

At the beginning of the present year the United States government and many com-

Special bodies filled with the industry assured figures that would almost seem to have marked the zenith of prosperity. The figures have been so impressive that they have drawn a very exhaustive and comprehensive article published in the Automobile magazine, even as yet only scratched the surface.

The total registration of gasoline passenger cars between January and July this year has been $9,836 for the entire United States. This is 18.8 per cent. increase over 1911. Between July 1st, 1911, and July 1st, 1912, the American manufacturers produced 2,523,360 cars of all sorts.

An estimate based on the total consumption of gasoline in the United States indicates that there are as present in use in the United States 1,000,000 automobiles. This is an increase of 9,000 as compared with 1911. During the last six months of 1911, the American manufacturers produced 1,157,434 commercial gasoline vehicles and 12,000 electric vehicles, at a total cost of $1,000,000,000.

Among the States, New York still retains the lead in the number of registrations. It has 1,000,000 registrations, an increase of 8,438 cars since the first of the year.

Iowa retains ninth place with a registration of 38,000 cars, an increase of 10,000. Michigan is a gun toeth with 34,588, or

PROVIDENCE TOUR A DELIGHTFUL ONE

Not Difficult One After Leaving
Winding Roads of Back Bay Fens.

A most popular tour out of the City of Boston is along the road connecting the capital of Massachusetts with that of Rhode Island. It is a road of no great length, but it is by no means difficult to follow, even though the first part of it is over winding roads of the back bay fens and the river.

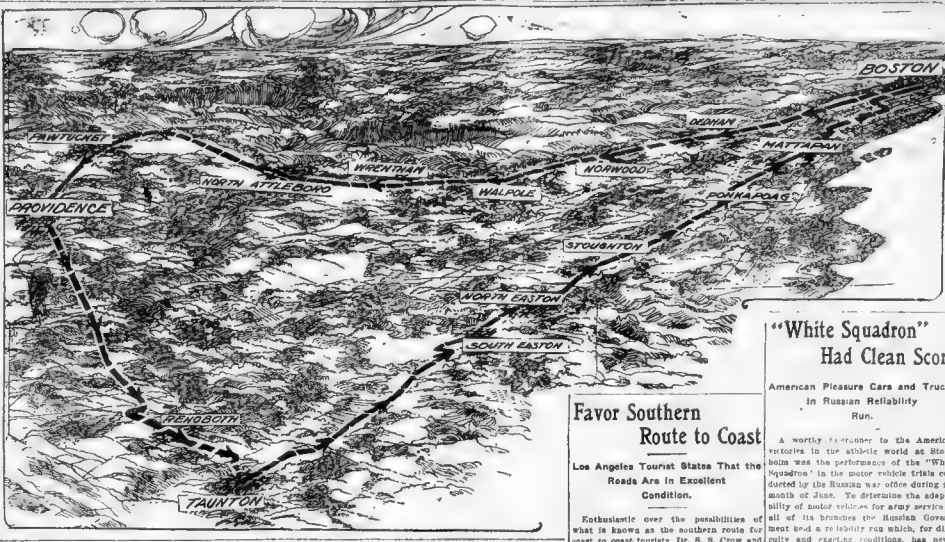

Starting at the foot of Boylston street and Massachusetts avenue one continues up Beacon street to Ipswich street, where one turns to the left and follows the car tracks past the old city hall, entering the city of Providence at the intersection of the car tracks and the river. The river is a beautiful sight, and the car tracks are well kept. The road is a delightful one, and the scenery is beautiful.

At the four corners turn sharp left on Ames street and follow it to the center of the city. The road is a delightful one, and the scenery is beautiful. The car tracks are well kept, and the river is a beautiful sight. The road is a delightful one, and the scenery is beautiful.

A MOTOR TRIP FROM CAPITAL TO CAPITAL

Through South Boston, cross the river and continue straight ahead on main road to four corners and at the next fork keep right and turn directly into Boston. Motorists Discuss Whether Fair Sex Should Drive Speed Cars.

For years there has been much argument among automobilists and others as to whether women should drive speed cars. Recently the question was given a decided answer by a group of motorists in the Boston City Club in Indianapolis. The group was present to ask what a woman would have been likely to have done if she had been the driver of a car on one day of the tour. Favor Southern Route to Coast

Los Angeles Tourist States That the Roads Are in Excellent Condition.

Enthusiastic over the possibilities of what is known as the southern route for coast to coast tourists, Dr. S. S. Crow and A. Paulsen of Los Angeles have just completed a motor car trip from that city to New York. The two men took the trip as a vacation in Dr. Crow's 48 horsepower Pierce Arrow machine. They made no attempt to establish any records, but of several places for visits with friends and relatives and for sight seeing. They left Los Angeles on June 25 and arrived in New York on July 8. Of the tour they spent seventeen days on the road. Here is what the doctor says.

"Within the next few years I believe the southern route, which leads through Yuma, Phoenix, Globe, Springfield and Trinidad, Colo., will be in excellent condition for tourists, and when it is it will be preferred by most people to the northern route. Most of the trans-continental tourists now choose the northern route, but this is only open during the winter months. During the winter many parts of it are impassable. The southern route will be open all the year round.

"Robt. Mc. Feilley and I were interested in this kind of touring and we were to start over the same route when here are some of the reasons why we do not.

"I don't carry a block and tackle attached to the rear hub.

"I travel only in the day time.

"I carry all the spare parts possible.

"I don't rely on narrow trails. I rely on the traveling through main roads.

American Pleasure Cars and Trucks
in Russian Reliability Run.

A worthy tribute to the American victories in the athletic world at Stockholm was the performance of the "White Squadron" in the motor vehicle trials conducted by the Russian war office during the month of June. To determine the adaptability of automobiles for army service in all of its branches the Russian Government had a reliability run which, for difficulty and racing conditions, has never been approached.

The route covered started at St. Petersburg, cleared across through Moscow, and then returned over a cut-off route to the Russian capital. The cars and trucks traveled about 1,000 miles in all. The route was a very difficult one, and the cars and trucks were in excellent condition when they returned.

The Complete Engine Trouble Manual is now ready

There Are One Hundred and Seventy Odd Aliments to Which Your Motor is Susceptible.

The engine trouble chart tells in detail each of these one hundred and seventy odd ailments—how to recognize them, how to remedy them.

It is a "ready reference book" on which is depicted every ailment that can puzzle the driver of a motor—and its solution. In any emergency it is invaluable.

You will find it in the August MoToR.

MoToR is the greatest automobile magazine in America—greatest in size, greatest in circulation, greatest in prestige and influence. There is no phase of Motordom, technical or otherwise, that MoToR does not cover. It is pre-eminently the best magazine in its field—the one that every automobile enthusiast needs most.

The experienced motorist turns to MoToR first of all, no matter whether it be a question of upkeep, car construction, or engine problems. He knows that MoToR is more than an interesting, newsy magazine; it is the motorist's final reference book, giving in full the desired information—well told and well illustrated.

An American Girl Buried With The First Viking Queen!

THE FETTERED SKELETON OF AN INDIAN MAID, CAPTURED IN A VIKING RAID ON OUR SHORES HUNDREDS OF YEARS BEFORE COLUMBUS, FOUND IN THE SHIP-TOMB OF A FIERCE NORSE CHIEFTAINESS

The Burial of a Viking (From the Painting by Henry von Sumieradski)

A FASCINATING solution of an archaeological mystery, recently made by European scientists, identifies beyond much doubt the first American girl that ever voyaged away from her native continent. She was born nearly or quite five hundred years before Columbus discovered America, somewhere along the New England coast, and was buried alive on the coast of Oseberg Sound, Norway, at the foot of a Viking Queen.

round skull near the usual large, elongated one. That both skulls were those of women is of additional interest—for usually only Viking kings and chieftains were accorded the honor of a seventy-foot Viking ship for their last resting place, and a vessel in which they would finally journey safely to Valhalla, the heaven of those Pagans of the far North. Their women were usually creatures of burden, held in almost servile subjection. But here was the case of a female Viking buried with all the honors of a king, with a bound captive at her feet.

It was not till this conclusion had been reached that a rust-eaten inscription on the captive's manacles was deciphered for its corroboration. The inscription, being translated, reads:

"At my feet she shall lie; the red maid from Vinland, my slave, when ye bury your Viking's queen."

And when the Norse Majesty's time had come, a thousand brave sea rovers, pirates, colonizers, scouts of the original discoverers of the New World, A. D. 1000, or thereabouts, set to work digging on the coast of Oseberg Sound, Norway, the tremendous trench wherein her boat-mausoleum was to rest "until released by Valhalla."

This boat-mausoleum was the Queen's favorite seagoing vessel, an oaken seventy-footer, above six feet amidship and five feet deep, with a mast thirty-five feet high, twenty-eight oars and a rudder on the starboard side.

It had carried the Queen to Vinland and carried her back again—her and the Indian maid her slave, from whom she wouldn't part even in death.

In the center of the boat-mausoleum, a lofty throne of carved wood was set up, and there, her back to the stern, the great Queen sat in state in her royal robes, a crown of oak leaves on her brow. Her right elbow rested on a massive staff let into the floor, her scepter, emblem of authority, while her heavy hand extended toward her grave-companion, the American girl, who faced the awful mistress kneeling.

Those practiced in Norsemen's lore and customs doubt not that this unfortunate American attendant upon savage royalty was buried alive. When a chieftain of the Vikings died, his body slave and the horses and treasures he liked best were buried with him in the war vessel in which he was supposed to ride to Valhalla. So were the Queens of the period provided on their last journey with a servant, horses, sledges and harness "for use in after life."

There is mute evidence that the American girl was no willing sacrifice, for her feet were unshod and secured to a staple in the floor, and the hands and arms of the skeleton, when found, bore fetters and chains. Moreover, those that made her prisoner in the dead house placed a sag of bone in her mouth, the sag being fastened to the back of the head with dog's sinews.

The slave girl was not to disturb the Skald's songs for the dead by cries for mercy, nor was she to prolong life by eating of the victuals stored in the tomb.

The Queen, buried with all the honors of her rank, was an old woman, a victim of the gout and other diseases, as her skeleton proved to the doctors. The American slave girl, on the other hand, was young, vigorous, torable, no doubt; yet the barbaric custom, of which she knew naught, sentenced her to be immured alive and forced slow starvation upon her while loads of estates were within easy reach of her hands. The records of human inhumanity tell of no more horrible fate than that endured by the first American girl ever to tread European soil.

The supposition among those versed in Norse lore is that the Queen, feeling, during her sojourn in Vinland, that she was marked for death, decided to return to Norway, and brought this girl over to the Norseman's fatherland as a proof of conquest. As such she was accepted, likewise as a slave, for in those days, and for many centuries after, all prisoners of war were enslaved. Hence, when the Queen died, her request to bury the girl with her was treated as a matter of course and as part of the ceremonial. For the Queen had to have a personal attendant as well as horses, equipment and jewelry, to enter Valhalla in a manner befitting her rank.

After the Queen's body was seated in state, her head, limbs and back secured by bands of bronze to a wooden frame, the Norsemen grouped about her the insignia of her great office and her household goods.

A Viking Ship Used for Burial
(Found at Gokstad, Norway)

All students of history know that the hardy Vikings of Norway and Iceland had colonized what is now the State of Rhode Island fully five centuries before Columbus made his famous voyage—and named their new possessions Vinland. The hero of this early voyage of discovery was Leif, son of Eric the Red, sent forth on his quest by the Norwegian King Olaf.

Yet when several years ago, an ancient Viking ship was dug out of the sands of Oseberg Sound, and found to have been converted into a mausoleum for the tomb of some Viking celebrity—as was the custom—the presence at the feet of the illustrious dead of a smallish skull, round in shape, instead of having the elongated shape of a Norse skull, it seemed to have occurred to no one that the explanation was—the burial of a captive brought from Vinland.

That, indeed, now turns out to be the solution of the presence in an ancient Norse mausoleum of a small,

WHAT IS BEAUTY?

Science and Art
Both Try to Answer the Ages
Old Question-- and the Most Beautiful Woman in

America Is Being Sought to Settle It. Are You She?

Do you think you are the most beautiful woman in America?

Truly a tremendous thought, an almost inconceivable audacious thought, yet somebody must be the most beautiful.

Here, at last, is an opportunity to have this tremendous question decided in an authoritative and at the same time a practical manner.

Send your photograph to this newspaper and a board of experts will decide whether you are the most beautiful. If the decision is in your favor you may have an engagement on the stage at a weekly salary of $250 for not less than four weeks.

It is desirable that your photograph should be taken by a photographer of high artistic ability, for an inferior one can completely conceal the attractions of the most radiant beauty.

To find out whether you have a chance of winning in this contest it will be useful to compare yourself with some well-recognized type of American beauty.

Three such types are printed on this page. If you have a photograph which in the opinion of many of our friends shows you to be at least as beautiful as any of these, send it in.

The three types are Harrison Fisher's ideal girl, Mrs. Phil Lydig and Miss Maxine Elliott. Two of these are well-known personalities. The third is also a personality, but an anonymous one presented to us through the magic medium of Mr. Fisher's pencil.

These types are vastly different and yet they are all undoubted beauties. They show how great a role must be taken into consideration in selecting the perfect beauty. If a man's ideal happens to be a tall blonde how could he give the prize to the most perfect petite-brunette on earth? This may appear an insurmountable difficulty to the average man, but the judges will be experts who will rise superior to such difficulties.

Let us hear some expert arguments in favor of the three types of beauty shown here. Harrison Fisher, the noted artist, has described the type drawn by his own pencil thus:

"She would be a brunette and not tall. Her hair would lie in loose waves about her head and face. It would be black, shining, rippling hair. It would not be curly, nor yet straight.

"Her features would be nearly, but not quite, regular. There would be enough irregularity to make the face pliant. Her eyes would be gray with thick black lashes and eyebrows, and heaven forbid that they should be pop-eyes, eyes that seemed ready to roll out upon her face. They would be eyes that kept you guessing, inscrutable eyes, not too widely open. Many admire wide open, candid, childish eyes. I don't. I like them half veiled with dark eyelashes. This is most important. I like a strong lower jaw set low in the face and giving the same impression of the face as a house upon a firm foundation. If I knew a girl of such a type, and she was intelligent and of strong character, softened by tenderness, I wouldn't be a bachelor any longer than she made me."

And then there is Mrs. "Phil" Lydig, the beauty, who is also one of the most noted members of New York's fashionable society. What could be greater than the contrast between Mrs. Lydig and the Harrison Fisher girl?

Mrs. Lydig's most admired feature is her back with its exquisite purity of curved line. Nobody feels hurt when Mrs. Lydig turns her back on him. You may think that because Mrs. Lydig has a reticence rather than a classical pose that she falls short of the highest standard of beauty, but such is not the opinion of the experts in such matters. Helleu, the noted French etcher, who made many pictures of Mrs. Lydig, said she possessed thirty-nine of the forty cardinal points of beauty. He enumerated the forty cardinal points with much precision, showing that he possessed a knowledge of the subject such as few mortals have.

The remaining type is Miss Maxine Elliott, the noted actress. She is probably, though not certainly, the most classically correct type of beauty that America can offer. The frivolous Nat Goodwin, when running over the long list of wives from whom he had parted, remarked of Miss Maxine Elliott: "She was a Roman Senator."

Now for the conditions of this contest: To the woman whose photograph shows her to be the most beautiful in America the Winter Garden Company will offer an engagement of at least four weeks at a minimum salary of $250 a week, with the option of renewing the contract for a longer period. In addition the company will provide her with suitable costumes and her traveling expenses to New York.

Five handsome gold medals will be awarded to five other women whose beauty shall be attested to rank next to that of the winner of the first prize.

Write your full name and address and your age on the back of your best and most recent photograph and mail it at once to:

Beauty Contest Editor,
Post Office Box 208,
New York City.

Photographs submitted in this contest positively cannot be returned. They become the property of this newspaper, which reserves all rights to their publication if desired. A jury of the greatest American artists will pass upon the photographs and pick the winners. Their names will be announced later.

HOW CITY HALL SQUARE LOOKS FROM THE TOP OF NEW YORK.

THE top of New York has been raised several hundred feet. It is represented now by the tower of the new Woolworth Building—fifty-five stories and seven hundred and fifty feet from the street level. How the tower looks and how City Hall Square, with its manifold activities, appears from its summit, may be gathered from the remarkable photographs reproduced on this page. In one of them is shown the Square and vicinity as it was unfurled from the top of the tower when the last bolt and rivet were put in place. The intricacy of the ironworkers which made the edifice possible is well illustrated in another picture, where one of them is seen smoking a cigarette while standing on the very top of New York. New York has always been renowned for its skyscrapers, but the completion of this structure gives the metropolis the distinction of possessing the highest building in the world, if the Eiffel Tower, which is in no sense a building, be excluded. From the upper stories of this mammoth building pedestrians along Broadway appear as ants, the street cars like children's toys, while the City Hall and other buildings of five or six stories look like doll's houses.

NOISE == By Governor Aram J. Pothier

The Rhode Island Governor is Editor of Today's Sunday American

NOISE is an instrument used today by men who would confuse, break down and destroy, says Governor Pothier. THOUGHT is the most effectual weapon with which to combat noise.

By ARAM J. POTHIER,
Governor of Rhode Island.

NOISE is an expedient used today by men who would confuse, break down and destroy. NOISE is an expedient of those who, from motives of PERSONAL AMBITION OR DISSATISFACTION, would seek to overthrow the established institutions of our republican form of government; to change the existing order of things and to set up in its place SOMETHING OF THEIR OWN FASHIONING. We see instances of this every day. We HAVE seen instances of it for the past fifty years. And the reason the American people have not been overwhelmed by noise is because the American people THINK. THOUGHT is the most effectual weapon with which to combat NOISE. The power of thought is given to EVERY HUMAN BEING, and it is to the interest of every human being to CULTIVATE THIS FACULTY, that he may be able to determine the true from the false—the REAL from the VISIONARY. The capacity for thinking clearly and logically is more highly developed in America than anywhere else on the face of the globe. Under our free form of government, where men are the masters of themselves, they are encouraged by their very environment to THINK FOR THEMSELVES. The great majority are able to DO THEIR OWN THINKING, in the face of noise and in spite of attempts to confuse them. But there are many, VERY many, whose ideas become confused when the noise becomes great, and with whom the efforts of the noisemakers to mislead are, at times, and in some degree, SUCCESSFUL. It is to those people who unwittingly permit noise to overwhelm their reason that the DEMAGOGUES address himself. It is upon those people that he depends for support in his outcry against our system of government. It is to them that he appeals, in phrases calculated to arouse passion and prejudice—to stimulate enthusiasm, and to incite an uprising against FANCIED GRIEVANCES. Our political life is full of illustrations. Not many years ago the cry of the demagogue was—as in a measure it still is today—"THE WORKINGMAN." It was heard everywhere. It was the keynote of the spellbinders of ALL political parties. It was the clarion-call used for all sorts of purposes, until the workingman began to fancy that he was the special protégé to be looked after, and his interests made the personal concern of every candidate for office of whatever party. Next it was "THE DINNER-PAIL." From every rostrum the magic word resounded throughout the land, and "THE DINNER-PAIL" became the slogan by which the masses were to be swayed. A little later there was another modification, and "THE PEOPLE" became the battle-cry of the political exhorters. It was the OPEN SESAME to prestige and power. Today we see the process of evolution carried one step further—and "PROGRESS-SIVE" has become a rallying cry. THE TIME HAS AGAIN COME FOR THE AMERICAN PEOPLE TO THINK! They must ask themselves—"What is progressiveness?" What kind of progress does progressiveness, as it is professed by those who are shouting it most loudly, mean? What policies of government—what economic principles—what industrial program—what character of political adjustment—will result in REAL PROGRESS for the American people? THE NOISEMAKERS are already abroad in the land, ready with their own answers to these questions. Some of them tell you that the policies of government under which we have lived for three generations—with the vested rights of our citizens protected by a constitution and the operation of that constitution safeguarded and perpetuated by a judicial system that brooks no contempt—are the only ones under which the republic can endure. Others declare that the constitution is a barrier about the necks of the people by which the courts are leading them servilely hither and thither according to the dictates of a soulless plutocracy; that that constitution is a system whereby judicial decisions and the judges themselves can be recalled by the people at will, and the constitution thus remoded in a day to suit a PASSING FANCY. Some will tell you that industrial property in this country can be perpetuated ONLY by the POLICY OF PROTECTION to American industries which has prevailed for the past half century. Others will declare that the protection policy is restricting the market in which the consumers may purchase the necessities of life, while enabling the producers of commodities to maintain prices at a level which is enriching them and impoverishing the consumer through "THE HIGH COST OF LIVING." Some will tell you that the most perfect political adjustment lies in our present form of representative government; that legislation by the whole people is cumbersome and impracticable, and that the remedy for ill-considered legislation is by THE BALLOT. Others will declare that the people should instate their OWN legislation and that the work of their representatives should be subject to revision and to repeal by the people AT WILL; and likewise that the veto power of the Executive should be susceptible of similar review by a popular majority. Much NOISE will be made by the men who will harangue the people on both sides of these questions. A VERY NOISY NOISE will be made about the high cost of living and the causes thereof. THE HIGH COST OF LIVING is a subject on which the great mass of consumers in this country should THINK and THINK DEEPLY, that they may arrive at the TRUTH and not be misled by noisy contentions. They must THINK CLEARLY, and ask themselves if there are not OTHER CAUSES for the prevailing prices of commodities than the fact that the production of those commodities is restricted by our tariff laws. They should examine carefully EVERY ITEM OF EXPENSE that goes into the manufacture and handling of various articles of consumption and general use, from the time the raw material is gathered until the article is sold over the counter. They should consider the expense of gathering the raw material, and see if it has increased within the past generation. They should consider the item of TRANSPORTATION of this raw material to the FACTORY, and see if there has been an increase in expense there. They should, in their mind's eye, contemplate the VARIOUS PROCESSES to which the raw material is subjected in producing the FINISHED PRODUCT, and ask themselves if these various processes can be performed as economically as they could a few years ago. They should take into consideration the cost of transportation of the finished product to market; the cost of handling this product through the wholesale houses and by the retailers; and the cost of selling it over the counter, and should ask themselves if there has been any increased expense involved in these various stages of the journey. They should ask themselves if the HIGHER WAGES which are today paid American workmen have not INCREASED THE COST of gathering the raw material—of transport-

Governor Aram J. Pothier of Rhode Island, Editor of today's Sunday American

There is ONE ITEM affecting the price of commodities to the consumer which we may well consider SERIOUSLY. As the industries of the country, and ESPECIALLY OF NEW ENGLAND, continue to grow, traffic will become MORE AND MORE CONGESTED, and the expense incident to delayed shipments and the loss on perishable goods INCREASE. THE ONLY solution is increased transportation facilities by both LAND AND WATER. The railway systems that NOW serve New England will presently be supplemented by a GREAT TRANSCONTINENTAL SYSTEM which has already undertaken extensive preparations for sending its branches into BOSTON and into PROVIDENCE. It will not be many years, at the rate our industries and our population are growing, before the additional facilities thus afforded will be found to be an ACTUAL NECESSITY, and the wisdom which prompted their admittance to our New England ports APPRECIATED AND APPLAUDED.

—From Gov. Pothier's Editorial.

ing it to the factory—of producing the finished product—of transporting the finished product to market—of delivering it over the counter through the salesman or saleswoman into the hands of the ULTIMATE CONSUMER. Then they should ask themselves IF THIS INCREASE IN WAGES ALL ALONG THE LINE IS NOT, IN FACT, THE PRINCIPAL ELEMENT that has entered into the increase in the price of practically every commodity to the consumer. They should ask themselves if the average increase in wages of workmen and workwomen in nearly every line of industrial activity in the country has not INCREASED THE PURCHASING POWER of those workmen and workwomen to a degree EQUAL TO, IF NOT IN EXCESS OF, the increased cost of the necessities of life which they purchase with their increased wages. They should ask themselves honestly if they are not living better today than they or their fathers and mothers were living twenty or thirty years ago. After they have settled these questions to their own satisfaction by honest thinking they should ask themselves whether they can honestly believe that WITHOUT OUR SYSTEM OF PROTECTION to American industries—that without the assurance to the American manufacturer that he will receive a price for his goods commensurate with the cost of production—THE AMERICAN WAGE EARNER COULD POSSIBLY CONTINUE TO COMMAND OR EXPECT FROM THE MANUFACTURER THE SAME SCALE OF WAGES THAT HE NOW RECEIVES. THE NOISEMAKERS tell you that this country has been deprived of her "natural industrial expansion and progress" by the system of protection. But the UNITED STATES CENSUS FIGURES SHOW that from 1904 to 1909 the capital invested in manufacturing increased from $12,675,000,000 to $13,428,000,000; that the value of products increased from $14,783,000,000 to $20,672,000,000; that the number of wage earners increased from 6,213,612 to 7,678,678, and that wages increased from $2,610,000,000 to $3,427,000,000. The cotton industry, in which New England is heavily interested, increased its products $290,000,000 in the ten years from 1899 to 1909; while the woolen industry showed an increase of $10,000,000. Do these figures show that our country has been deprived of her "natural industrial expansion and progress," or do they demonstrate that we have enjoyed a PERIOD OF REMARKABLE DEVELOPMENT? I DO NOT BELIEVE THAT YOU BELIEVE THAT A CHANGE IN OUR PROTECTIVE POLICY OFFERS THE SOLUTION TO THE HIGH COST OF LIVING. I believe that you realize fully that such a change could mean only one of two things—either that our MACHINERY MUST STOP for lack of profitable employment or our WAGES MUST BE CUT DOWN TO THE FOREIGN LEVEL. There is, however, one item affecting the price of commodities to the consumer which we may well consider seriously. THE COST OF TRANSPORTATION is a continental subject of dispute between shippers and merchants and the transportation companies. It is so important an item that the government maintains a department charged with the specific duty of regulating transportation rates. As the INDUSTRIES of the country, and especially of NEW ENGLAND, CONTINUE TO GROW AND MULTIPLY, traffic will become more and more congested, and the expense incident to delayed shipments and the loss on perishable goods increase. THE ONLY SOLUTION is INCREASED TRANSPORTATION FACILITIES BY BOTH LAND AND WATER. I believe that such an increase CANNOT COME TOO SOON. The railway systems that now serve New England will presently be supplemented by a GREAT TRANSCONTINENTAL SYSTEM which has already undertaken extensive preparations for sending its branches into BOSTON and into PROVIDENCE. It will not be many years, at the rate our industries and our population are growing, before the additional facilities thus afforded will be found to be an actual necessity, and the wisdom which prompted their admittance to our New England ports appreciated and applauded. With the trade centres of the Great Northwest and of the ports of the South Atlantic brought into direct communication with us by this means, and with improved avenues of waterway communication between New England and the distributing points on the Atlantic Coast, which are certain to follow the determined agitation in their behalf, we shall see, I believe, a DECREASE IN TRANSPORTATION CHARGES and a RESULTANT DECREASE IN THE PRICE OF THE COMMODITIES which we import from every section of the country. A THOUGHTFUL STUDY of the economic bearing of these questions—of their relation to the cost of living and the WELFARE and PROSPERITY of our CITIZENS—is the BEST ANTIDOTE FOR NOISE. NOISE must not be permitted to drown THOUGHT. While the NOISEMAKERS are busy, THINK. And the MORE NOISE they make the HARDER you must THINK.

Catching Crime in the Child Delinquent

How Science Hopes to Prevent the Adult Law-Breaker by Finding the Moral Defects in the Young, Told by Professor Max G. Schlapp, of Cornell University.

THE murder of little Julia Connor followed a few days later by the shooting of Nathan Swartz, the murderer, shocked New York and the world. Not only was the first crime horrible, but the second was the explanation of it. The culture had been arrested before attempting to corrupt the morals of a minor and committed to the New York City Reformatory, Hart's Island where he was kept for eighteen months. But when Swartz committed suicide he left some letters which proved conclusively that he was not mentally responsible, and many thinkers saw in this balance a suggestion of the responsibility of society for not treating the irresponsible differently. The Reformatory is no place to which to send such delinquents for it offers no medical treatment, and even the industrial training is not very thorough. Some public spirited men and women have been giving thought to this question and while waiting for State or city to find the necessary institution for treating the abnormal or subnormal delinquent have started the Hillside Farm School at White Plains, which receives as many as it can accommodate of the poor children thus afflicted, and expects soon to increase its capacity. One of the most earnest and skilled workers in the field is Dr. Max G. Schlapp, who has a practical authority on the questions here raised. What he has to say on the subject must therefore be received thoughtfully and with respect.

INSANITY, feeble-mindedness, and crime are associated in all the countries of the world in which we find reliable records. No doubt these infirmities are developing among the population of every nation. The causes produce like effects everywhere. It is not the afflicted persons alone that are affected by the delinquent behavior, it is the prospective victims who must fall in ever increasing numbers that are to be considered only with others. The danger comes to every man's door, the menace, possible to everyone who walks the street, to whom, the amazing increase of insanity, feeble-mindedness, and crime has been borne on the present population of the world, whose latencies are being unloosed. Considering future populations it looks at first thought as if it were only a matter of arithmetic to decide when they will become extinct, but our reason would hardly lead us that far, because conditions, and therefore, when we take the statistics of the countries of Europe that are most accurate in preparing them and most thorough in their methods of gathering them, and arrange them in charts, we know from the line where the line of crime and insanity, feeble-mindedness, and crime, with the passing years that there is a direct relation between the two. We would know this if our medical schools and our medical practice had taught us nothing, and further, we would know nothing about abnormalities of mind that conditions, if not usually, make criminal acts involuntary.

These diseases are not "catching." They may consider the child, and then, so long as our persons or our families are not threatened, we are apt to forget that with crime increasing everywhere, not by reason of poverty or environment, but by reason of social conditions that any produced by social life, some of us, or our next door neighbors, may be among the victims responsible or vicious persons running at large.

Feeble-minded children and feeble-minded men are running about these streets today as if they were not controlled by law to put a feeble-minded child into custody. Yet that feeble-minded child, uneducated, such, amiable, careless as he frequently is, is potentially a criminal and at any moment may commit a crime. That child is permitted to grow up without restraint, except such as parents exercise and this has no effect whatever in these cases. The child is allowed to marry and bring forth children of his own kind, more feeble-minded, more dangerous. There is no system of control to prevent the community persons so afflicted, and no law whatever to prevent their untrammelled movement.

Statistics show us only the feeble-minded persons who are registered, and have no way of recognizing or estimating the number of those outside, but if we could get the figures they could be astounding. A law should be enacted requiring that all persons of doubtful whether in institutions or at large be registered by the State. We would get a fairly close count of them, and they would always have their identity and the history of their cases and we could keep watch over them.

Family physicians should be required to make reports of their cases, and these reports should be followed by thorough examinations by a commission made up of medical specialists, and the conclusion should determine the care of the child. From the nature of the case they could determine whether it ought to be left in charge of its parents, whether it should be sent to an institution and kept there while mentally unsound. Other agencies than the family physician could be utilized, all of them created in one way by law to segregate insane or feeble-minded persons from the community. Public school teachers, for instance, or superintendents, could have blank forms making returns of peculiar cases coming under their observations, such as extraordinary inability to learn, or frequent misconduct notwithstanding correction or kindly counsel, and all those cases that are so plain as to create concern among the children themselves. Other means that might be devised to segregate these mentally unbalanced children will be devised. evil companions and associated with evil women. Before he was sixteen he had frequently been intoxicated. This is as far as the history goes. There is to-day only one end for that boy and that is the penitentiary. He will listen carelessly to any older person who cares to reason with him, but whether it is good advice or a grandiose threat, the result will be the same. He is also indifferent to kindness and cruelty. Now, if this boy had been taken from school when his teacher noticed he was not right, when even his little companions noticed it, and there had been a State institution, exclusively for such cases, to which he could have been sent and patiently watched while his symptoms were being studied, the physical lesion causing his disturbance might have been discovered and corrected and the boy saved himself. One criminal case to prey upon society might have been the result.

The son of a well-to-do business man, apparently all right up to the age of fourteen, according to the parents, bright, cheerful, laughing, happy, but very likely having latent the qualities of a moral imbecile. When scolded by his mother and father he took it patiently and promised not to offend again. He seemed frank and untroubled by his intentions and looked forward to keep faith. He stayed away all night, and when he was upbraided he would agree that he had not done right. The singular thing about him was that he manifested no love for his parents and he did not seem to be capable of deep affection, singular, because he was so agreeable in his attitude toward his parents and all people. This is peculiar to high-grade delinquents. They have a cunning that passes for intelligence.

Trades people asked his mother about various sums he had been borrowing from them for a long time, saying his mother had connected extraordinary loans in order to get the money and had sent him. He strung along for a long time, making a genuine effort to strangle reasons together to make it appear plausible that his mother, who was in any of the longer than a few weeks, would obtain money in that way. As a young man he was known about town and friends, a happy, congenial companion. He was not in any way a trouble-maker, but obtained through his father or through the intervention of friends. He never stayed in any of the longer than a few weeks. Employment did not interest him; it was a bore. Usually he lost his place by going out one day, happy and care-free, and never returning to work. His father resented with him, friends resented with him, and taking personal interest in his welfare.

WHEN first we met (the Sea and I),
Like one before a King,
I stood in awe; nor felt nor saw
The sun, the winds, the earth, the sky,
Or any other thing;
God's universe to me
Was just the Sea.

When next we met, the lordly Main
Played but a conquer's part
Crowned Queen was I; and earth and sky
And sun and sea were my domain;
Since Love was in my heart
Before, beyond, above,
Was only Love.

II.
LOVE built me on a little rock
A little house of pine;
At first the sea
Beast angry
About that house of mine;
(That dear, dear house of mine).
But when it turned to go away
Beyond the sandy track,
Down o'er its wall
The house would call,
Until the Sea came back,
(It always hurried back).

And now the two have grown so fond (Oh, breathe no word of this),
When clouds hang low
And east winds blow,
They meet and kiss and kiss;
(At night I hear them kiss).

III.
THE Dawn was flying from the Night;
Swift as the wind she sped;
Her hair was like a fleece of light;
Her cheeks were warm and red.

All passion pale, the Night pursued;
She fled away, away;
And in her garments, rainbow hues,
She gained the peak of Day.

And then, all shaken with alarms,
She leaped down from her crest
Into the Sea's uplifted arms,
And swooned upon his breast.

The Return of Seldum Seezit---

The World Famous Delicatessen Detective Returns to Solve the Gambler Murder Mystery

By LEWIS ALLEN

CHAPTER I.

"COME IN!" As soon as Seldum Seezit, the World-Famous Delicatessen Detective, uttered these thrilling words the door to his study suddenly opened and five well-dressed citizens entered.

The utmost surprise could be seen on their faces, along with other things like eyes, noses, and even mouths.

"In the name of mystery!" exclaimed the spokesman, "how did you know we were going to knock?"

"Everybody's knocking, now," answered our hero, "but it is nothing," he added, smiling happily. "To what am I indebted for this visit? I will tell you now I will not join a golf club, I have paid my taxes and I don't care a continental hyphenated asterisk who's elected president, so long as it's Wilson."

"Pardon," said the spokesman, "we came here representing the good citizens of New York."

"One what?" ejaculated Seldum Seezit, counting the five men, "I didn't think there were so many."

"We want you to solve this murder mystery; we want you to determine who killed the gambler, Panaythal."

"Look here!" shouted Seldum Seezit, leaping to his feet and looking as happy as a man being run over by motor truck; "more than a year ago I gave up the detective business. It was too easy and I made my pile. I am growing grey trying to spend my income, and I'll never take another case."

"You have read about the case in the papers?" gently asked the spokesman.

"What else is there to read in the papers?" snarled Seezit with all the innocence and gaiety of a suffragette.

"Well, what do you think of it?" persisted the spokesman.

"The City Life Section wouldn't dare print what I think of it," giggled Seezit.

"Well," sighed the spokesman, who was some diplomat, "I told my friends here that you couldn't come back, that as a detective you couldn't detect."

"Enough!" snapped our hero, frowning as red as a lemon. "I'll take up this case for you citizens, just to help you out. What do you want done?"

"You might—try and detect something," suggested the spokesman; "find out the men higher up—and—"

"And then ask them to tea, I presume," sneered our hero, as he showed the committee of citizens to the door.

CHAPTER II.

A KIND-FACED man with harmless side-whiskers wandered into police headquarters.

"Could you—er—tell me anything about this murder?" he asked timidly.

"What murder?" yelled one of the officials.

"The murder of this gambler, Panaythal."

"Yes, there was such a murder!" shouted the official.

"For the love of Graft, what none do you want? You are a citizen and you pay tax, and I want to know what right you've got to ask me a question? How dare you come in here, anyway? Here I've gone to all the bother of giving you this valuable information to the effect there was such a murder and you are not satisfied. What more could you expect or demand?"

At this moment the eyes of the mild-mannered citizen gleamed ominously, he deftly removed his harmless side-whiskers, pulled back his hat and flashed his badge, which was pinned inside his soft collar.

"Seldum Seezit!"

It was the high police official who gasped those words, so fraught with dismay.

"Our hero, for it was none other, nodded.

"Are you on this case?" asked the official, turning as gray as automobile 41312.

Seldum Seezit nodded. "Now," he hissed, "I want that information and I want it all!"

"The police official shuddered. "It is useless," he gasped, "I must tell you all," and, leaning over, he whispered into the great detective's ear, "The murdered man is dead!"

"Ha!" ejaculated Seldum Seezit, leaping back. "Ha! I suspected it from the first!"

And so, having cleverly wrung all this information from the police department, our hero bounced on his heel (it was a rubber heel) and made his exit.

CHAPTER III.

"I WANT YOU!" Seldum Seezit, the world-famous detective, fairly hissed the words as he stood on the corner of Forty-third and Fifty-ninth streets.

Mike the Mangler wheeled suddenly in his hand he held a terrible weapon, but even as he wheeled Seldum Seezit, with all the grace of a Gabby Delees, kicked it from his hand.

The frankfurter sandwich dropped from the nerveless fingers of Mike the Mangler and shattered into a thousand small pieces.

"Now go bustle me breakfast," snarled Mike. "T'll—oh, gee, what you Mr. Seezit? I beg pardon, and the terrible gangster paled.

"For five minutes our hero talked with Mike. Every word Mike spoke was a clue. He even told the truth a couple of times, in his excitement.

"Then you really mean that Brigadier-General Hecker, of the police, once dined with the murdered Panaythal?"

"He sure did, Bo!" answered Mike the Mangler, with all the elegance of a senator.

"Ye gods and little fishes!" ejaculated Seldum Seezit, shuddering six or seven shudders, "won't Mayor Palmer be terribly annoyed to learn of this?"

CHAPTER IV.

"S this the Laughingyet Baths?" asked Seldum Seezit.

"This is them—wotot!" pleasantly snarled the doorman.

"I came here to rent a potato-dugging machine to peddure my hand with, you pie-faced gargoyle," answered the great detective, laughing right merrily as he punched three teeth four inches to the rear in the doorman's face.

Our hero was cleverly disguised. He wore a black mask, carried three revolvers, a black-jack, a dark lantern and a stick of dynamite.

"Oh, this," said the doorman, who now hissed, "come right in. I then you are one of the bunch."

"I want to arrange for a little murder breakfast," said Seezit to one of the employees. "We will have water-melon, jollied eggs, toast and a demi-tasse each." And while the employee was gone to fix this up our hero began to do a little detecting.

In one of the room the brush and comb had not been used. "Ha!" he exclaimed, "the man here had no use for a comb, must have been Baldy Blossom. That settles it, Harry Willing, Sam Haul and Piggy Gobbler were with him!"

By the time the assistant had returned Seldum Seezit had gone, and this time a perfectly good murder breakfast went to waste.

Seldum hurried to a barber shop.

"Fine weather we're havin'. Who'll win 'th pennant, do you think? Funny 'bout that murder, 'I seen a peach yesterday—wet or dry? Does the razor hurt? As far as 'th cops is concerned—shampoo, sir? Beats all about 'th 'higheastoffing, ain't it?—massage, shins? NEXT!"

Seldum Seezit staggered from the shop.

"And so," he laughed, as merrily as a wedding knell, "they've arrested Jack Wrestler, or John the Barber. The fool! As though a barber would talk!"

CHAPTER V.

THE committees of five citizens were seated about the table in the study of Seldum Seezit, the world-famous delicatessen detective.

"They are now after White Blackie, Lefty Looie, Hop the Blood, Dago Rank and Sam Chips," said Seezit.

"Well!" eagerly asked the spokesman.

"After they get those fellows."

"Will they have solved it then?" the spokesman asked Seezit.

"I should say not," asserted our hero, with all the nonchalance of a man sitting on the mince's silk hat.

"Why, they haven't arrested half the innocent ones yet!"

"But what are you going to do?" demanded the committee.

"I'm going to draw another $10,000 from you and proceed," said Seezit quietly.

"They gave him the money."

"Auto 41312 is all right, but the police have on model autos 13131 or 14131. Now that leaves them out-of—"

"We don't understand," said the spokesman.

"Why, you asphalt-domed boobies, there's all 'nase numbers, 255739, for the police to shift around to auto number combinations."

"Well, after that?"

"Oh, by that time the present generation will be dead and the matter will be dropped."

"But what have you learned thus far?"

"Why, didn't I tell you?" asked our great hero, looking as surprised as possible for a mere $10,000 fee.

"Clear me," he added, wiping away the sweat as he laughed, "the police have admitted that the murdered man is dead and I have advised them to look up headquarters before any more men they are hunting die a death in their way and give themselves up."

LIBEL ON BLAMELESS CHARACTERS

Bachelors Accused of Being More Criminal Than Married Men.

WHILE the following facts about the bachelors of the United States are true, the facts about the married men are not.

As an argument in favor of matrimony, it is stated that among every 1,000 bachelors there are 43 criminals, while among married men the ratio is only eighteen per 1,000.

Can you beat that? Genuine that the figures are correct, what are 43 criminals among 1,000? By the paragraph itself there are 43 blameless bachelors to 1 who may be guilty of trifling offenses against the law.

And as for saying there are only 18 criminals among 1,000 married men, the reason is obvious. Married men are so accustomed to concealment, deception and evasion that it is a wonder 18 criminals are discovered among 1,000 of them.

Down with such a label on the blameless bachelor!

ACCUSTOMED TO CONCEALMENT AND DECEPTION.

IN THE SMILE'S LETTER BOX.

A SEA COOK.

TO THE EDITOR—Recently I made a trip from Boston to Cape Cod in a motor boat named the Jolly Roger. It is owned by a tall, dark-faced person known to me only as the Pirate. He asked me to accompany him on the trip. Having been introduced by a mutual friend, I accepted. Once on the high seas this scoundrel said, "I am captain and I order you to be sea cook. Cook me a good meal at once." I was feeling very seasick and can't cook, but he threatened to throw me overboard, so I had to warm up some beans for him. What can I do about this?

KIRBY, A. B.

(Your only redress is to become captain of another boat and invite "The Pirate" aboard. On the high seas you can order him to scrub the keel or anything else you like.—Ed.)

WOULD HELP SOME.

TO THE EDITOR—Is there any way of inducing roomers to refrain from crowing in the morning?

SLEEPY SAM.

(You might try feeding them with balls of meat every time they open their mouths to crow.—Ed.)

Notes from Seashore.

The pollen roll upon the beach at Atlantic City. If there was no beach we don't know what they would roll upon.

Sea shells are found along the seashore. If inland the shells are not sea shells, but three shells, a very different type.

IN OLD BOSTON.

In 1870 the site of Boston was full of bull moose.

OUR WEEKLY HEALTH HINT.

Don't feed a lion with a spoon, use a long pole.

Household Hints for Campers

Mosquitoes are never found in very dense smoke or in fire. Therefore if you wish to avoid mosquito bites light a fire under yourself.

To put a new wick in a lamp has a new lamp with a wick already in it.

To tell the difference between porcelain and pottery, hold the article up to the light so that you can see better. If in the dark, strike a match.

Matches should be kept in a dry place, because wet matches are of very little use to anybody. If your matches do become damp, and you wish to light a fire, upon your oil lamp and your tent will make giving forth a cheerful blaze.

Bull moose are not dangerous at all though a single bull moose makes a lot of noise.

Old bird gloves may be used for socks by male members of the family if the hands are cut off.

Third of a Series of Summer Smiles

By GEORGE NASH, in "Office 666."

Copyright, 1912, by the Author of New Amusements.

In the lobby of a well-known hotel the other afternoon an incident occurred to remind me that the phone girls have other interests besides answering calls. Two of them, in different exchanges, had a chat over the wires. To them it was on nearly the most important subject in the world—dress.

Both of the chicks were going to Rockaway on the following Saturday afternoon, and the discussion on what they should wear was interesting. Ten minutes passed and the topic was still far from exhausted, but an impatient masculine voice at last compelled one of them to turn her thoughts to other things.

"Say—HILLARY! Hello!" the voice yelled. "Is that you? How are—say, who is this talking? No, I'm not going to take any parcel. Who are you, anyhow? I want—"

"Here the girl cut in. "Say, now," she chirped, "I'll have you know yer talkin' to a lady. What line do you think you're on?"

"From all I've heard lately, it's a cinch it must be the clothesline. Now get my number, will you?"

He had only a young traveling salesman, and therefore, it appeared, that he found himself short of funds, he hardly knew what course to take.

After much hard thinking, he resolved to let the office know his sad plight. From the nearest post-office he mailed a wire.

"Have run short of ready money. Please write me here."

But the following morning brought no reply to his appeal. Patiently he waited for the second mail, but nothing came.

Again he resolved to telegraph, this time more urgently.

"No money. How shall I act? Wire answer."

Almost before he had reached his hotel again the messenger had brought a reply. Hastily the young man tore open the envelope and read the death sentence.

"Act as if you were broke."

The learned professor was giving his public lecture on philology, and for purposes of demonstration he invited a boy to the platform. After a critical examination of the lid of a casket, he turned to the audience.

"Ladies and gentlemen," he said, "the pronunciation on this little box is head in remarkably well developed. It is the basis of philology, and in the present case it proves that the boy has an extraordinary love for his parents. (Addressing the boy) Is that true, Johnny?"

Johnny hesitated a moment, then said: "Well, I got along pretty well with the old lady, but the old man ain't such a much."

"Why, how is that, my boy?" asked the professor. "Well, if you were in it, you'd be bump ver blowin' about is where pop but me yesterday sir a best buck."

A CHARMING lady of my acquaintance went to the theatre the other evening with a few friends, but when they were in the box she was separated from her friends by a man and a woman who seemed to pay no attention to each other. The lady figured out that if the two people would sit over a seat she could sit with her friends. Whereupon, bearing up her nerve, she said sweetly to the man:

"Beg pardon, but are you here alone?"

The man stared hard at the curtain as if he were drawing a salary.

"I beg your pardon," intently repeated, a little louder, "are you alone?"

Married Life the 16th Week

Copyright, 1912, by Ames and Howard Publishers, Inc. and by Bud Fisher. "Why I Left My Home, and all that sort of thing, you never hear of the poor husband. Perhaps he is too busy to write; perhaps no-body cares about him, anyway. Here for the first time we have a husband giving his views of married life in the way so many women have been doing of late."

By ROBERT SHERBERT TURNER.

THIS part of my autobiography should really be headed "Unmarried Life the Sixteenth Week," for my wife came to the country, too—I mean alas!

I wanted to go with her, but she said she knew that I would spend my vacation at home, when I could be fixing up the garden and house. As it would be no use for me to be at home unless she was there to show me what to do, it was better for me to take my vacation when she got back from here.

Personally, I couldn't see much chance in this for me, but I compromised with Lucy as usual and did what she said. She pointed out that I had plenty of chance, anyway, going to the office every day, while she had to stay in the house. Of course, she went to visit her friends often enough, but that was merely going to another house, and wasn't so much of a chance as going to an office.

Anyway, Lucy went away to Candian House, in O'Sullivan County, while I continued in the office. I had to promise that I would sleep in the house every night; that I would feed the cat night and morning; that I wouldn't entertain any of my friends in the house, but that I should scratch the dinnerroom table; and that if any burglars should try to steal the silver tray Lucy's aunt gave her when we were married.

The first night I came home from the office I thought it great. There was sure to be no bunch of Lucy's friends there, so that I couldn't read the evening paper, but must sit up straight in my chair and discuss book-keeping or unshocking the last dance at the Winter Garden in and tell the police how to catch the men behind the gamblers. I took my coffee, opened a can of sardines and read the paper. After a couple of hours I got hungry again and went out to Jack's to get a sandwich.

"Hello, Bob," cried several fellows there. "Haven't seen you for so long. Thought you were dead."

"Same thing," said another one—"he's married."

We had quite a reunion, and I didn't get home till about 12 o'clock. Then I found I had left the key home.

There wasn't a place in the town I could get a bed. There was no train until 4 o'clock—you know the way suburban towns are—nobody's supposed to want to go out of or into them between midnight and four in the morning—why four o'clock. I've never been able to remember why I had to walk five miles to the nearest town where there was a hotel, got to sleep about 3 a. m. and felt pretty good when I got to the office.

"Hello, Bob," said the boss, "what's the matter—been keeping late hours?"

"No, no," I replied. "I never stay out late."

"Well, you don't look at all up to the mark. Not going to get sick, are you?"

"Oh, no," said I. "No, I never get sick."

"You certainly look run down. I hate it—you need a vacation," said the boss, "Mr. Joskins, I protested. 'I don't need a vacation just now; really I don't.'"

"Yes you do, Turner, yes you do."

"There's a run of business just now, Mr. Joskins, and I don't like to leave at this time."

"The sentiment does you credit, Turner, credit credit. You have the spirit that a young man in business should have. If some of the other young men in this office there the boss looked intently at a couple of the other clerks—which tended to get me in good with them—I repeat, if some of the other young men in this office had the same spirit, it would be better both for my business and for the future of the young men themselves. As a token of my esteem for you, Turner, I give you a vacation of three weeks, beginning from today."

"But, Mr. Joskins, I—"

"Not a word, my boy, not a word. No thanks."

"But I—"

"There, now, Turner, that's enough. I won't listen to a word of thanks. And the boss went into his own office.

Lucy will never believe this story. And I can't hide it from her, for she has all the money, and I'll have to write her for some.

Oh, you married bliss.

Adventures of the Hunters

A Thrilling Account of the Hunter Family Hunting a Summer Resort—in Ten Palpitating Chapters.
By LEWIS ALLEN

Copyright, 1912, by Ames and Howard Publishers, Inc. and by Lewis Allen.

SYNOPSIS OF PRECEDING CHAPTERS
HUNTER'S mother had been told that her husband should select the summer resort. He chose the beach, which explains why they went to the mountains, where the guests called her mountain climbing chaperone a Tiger Woman. There a clamorous group of young people had been told to go to a lake. On the lake, however, passed by and left the mountain drive then to Lake Winnemac.

CHAPTER IV

"What does Winnemac mean?" asked Willie Hunter. The Hunters had only that morning arrived at the Winnemac resort.

"That's the name of the lake here," answered Mrs. Hunter.

"It's not it, but what does it mean?" insisted the boy.

"Why is the name of a 'Tiger' Indian prince?" Hunter began to explain.

Sound as though her father was a fish poacher, Mrs. Hunter said had been a dislike to the place.

"I've been told that it was a very dashingly blonde had taken a seat beside Mr. Hunter at dinner and talked amiably throughout the trip."

"This is a splendid resort," declared Hunter enthusiastically.

"It's not it, but what does it mean?" insisted the boy.

"To make 'em tender," said Tom.

Celebrate Later.

A WELL-KNOWN Scottish architect was traveling in Palestine recently, when news reached him of an addition to his family circle. The happy father immediately provided himself with some water from the Jordan to carry home for the christening of the infant, and returned to Scotland.

On the Sunday appointed for the ceremony he duly presented himself at the church, and sought out the bride in order to hand over the precious water to his care. He pulled the flask from his pocket, but the bride held it in a warning hand, and cried: "No water, no water."

"No the noo, sir, no the noo! Maybe after the kirk's oot!"

Our Friend Mrs. Malaprop.

SHE was nouveau riche and had a cottage for the summer at the seashore. Her one problem was how to secure as her house guest the recognized leader of society in her home town.

The invitation was being verbally extended, and, as a last inducement, Mrs. Malaprop added:

And as you sit on the front porch it is charming to watch the little white-shelled boats fit and go.

Should He?

During a discussion of the fitness of things in general, some one asked: "If a young man takes his best girl to the grand opera, spends $8 on a supper after the performance, and then takes her home in a taxicab, should he kiss her goodnight?"

In old bachelor who was present growled, "I don't think she ought to expect it. Seems to me he has done enough for her."

Raw Meat in the Fine Arts.

THE friend had dropped in to see D'Auber, the great animal painter, but the finishing touch on his latest painting. He was mystified, however, when D'Auber took some raw meat and rubbed it vigorously over the painted rabbit in the foreground.

"Why on earth did you do that?" he asked.

"Why, you see," explained D'Auber, "Mrs. Miltons is coming to see this picture to-day. When she sees her pet poodle smell that rabbit, and get excited over it, she'll buy it on the spot."

Pays to Advertise.

As a concert for charity in a country town Miss Carter obliged by reciting "The Village Blacksmith." At the conclusion of her recital the rural audience cheered.

"Annoyed!"

Miss Carter was about to grant the request when a burly fellow very much out of breath tapped her on the shoulder.

"I've just come round from in front," whispered the man excitedly. "I want yer to do us a favor."

Well, what is it?" queried Miss Carter.

It's this," whispered the intruder. "I happen ter be the feller you've been talkin' about, and I want yer to put in a verse this time sayin' as how I ter bid bicycles."

Dramatic Snap.

A NUMBER of players and playwrights at the Lambic Club were discussing the question of what constitutes the "snap" so persistently demanded of the dramatist by the managers of today.

"I have talked to many managers on this subject," said one writer, "but none has been able to give me any definite notion as to just what 'snap' is."

"I can help you out," declared Walter. "I have an idea for a new act play that just bursts with 'snap.' I'll give it to you. Here it is."

"Play opens with man and woman in drawing room, seated side by side on a sofa and embracing each other passionately."

"Enter to them a man with a suit case and an umbrella. He is of course to all intents, husband unexpectedly returned."

Husband no sooner takes in the situation than he yanks out a revolver and shoots both man and woman."

"Then takes out his glass, puts them on, looks about and suddenly gives a start."

"Merciful heavens!" he exclaims: "I'm on the wrong floor!"

Keeping Up with Time.

THE city chap who had hired out as extra farmhand during the harvest was not quite able to respond to the 4 o'clock pounding on his bedroom door the first morning as promptly as he had anticipated. He lingered at the pillow for a quarter of an hour past the appointed time and then dragged himself out, and by half past 5 he was "dumblin' across the field where the old farmer was hard at work."

"Mornin'," said the newcomer briskly.

"The old man leaver up in hurry."

"Yes," he granted, "it was."

Varied Stock.

A WRITER of "best sellers" has a cottage down in Maine, where he raised the man who served him with trout vegetables how much stock he kept on his farm.

"Six cows and a bull," said the producer, "two jacks of oxen, a 'Rox horse and three shares of Vermont Central.'"

And they did.

This will be continued next Sunday.

A VISION SEEN THROUGH THE CURTAINS OF A BED

ALMOST four hundred years ago the Benedictine Monks of St. Sixtus gave Raphael an order to paint the picture that you see on this page.

The infant Jesus in his mother's arms excels in this wonderful painting in majesty and beauty all the efforts of all the painters of the world.

The monks who gave the order commanded of the painter that he should present the Virgin and the infant in the company of St. Sixtus and St. Barbara.

The composition of this painting is marvelous in simplicity and beauty. On either side is a green curtain. It is said that the celestial beauty presented itself to his mind Raphael as he lay looking through the curtains at the foot of his bed. The vision of celestial beauty presented itself to his mind framed in those curtains, and so he painted it.

Reproductions of this wonderful painting inspiring and beautiful above all works of art in this world perhaps, should be in every home, before the eyes of all mothers and fathers and children.

Everything important in our lives you see most beautifully presented here.

The goodness and purity of woman, the dignity and power of man, the celestial beauty of childhood, and the infinite grandeur of simplicity—all are in this most wonderful work.

Greatest and most impressive of all is the face of the infant Jesus looking out in majesty from his mother's arms.

That is the most perfect and marvelous face of a child that has ever been painted. It is a face that should have its place in the room of every woman looking forward to the blessing of maternity. We wish that it might be possible, without rapid, defective printing, striking off tens of thousands of copies in an hour, to give a better idea of this beautiful picture. But some idea may be had here, at least, and those that choose may purchase for themselves an accurate reproduction at very slight cost.

You may study this painting for hours, the misty cloud of Cherubim in the background, the two little angels at the bottom of the picture looking up at Mary in adoration, the kneeling Pope, St. Sixtus, at the left and St. Barbara at the right looking down from the clouds to the earth and interceding for mankind.

Every detail is perfect, but always the eye returns to the majestic and fearful face of Jesus, the infant God, and to the beautiful face of the Virgin Mother.

This picture of the Divine Infant is not the picture of the laughing child so often painted by great men. It is, as Grayson writes, "The God Himself." It is the God of justice and of the last day.

In the most humble state of our flesh, beneath the veil of infancy, we see the terrifying splendor of infinite majesty in this picture.

The Divine Infant leaves between himself and us a place for fear, and in his presence we experience something of the fear of God that Adam felt and that he transmitted to his race. For attaining such heights of impression the means employed by Raphael are of an incomprehensible simplicity.

(Published by Permission of Braun & Co., Paris and New York.)

The picture thus seen by Raphael—greatest painter of power and beauty in the face of women and children—shows all that is important in life. Beautiful motherhood, perfect childhood and earnest, reverent manhood are all in this great painting.

The infant Jesus nestles familiarly in his mother's arms. Sitting on a fold of the white veil, that the Virgin supports with her left hand, he leans against the Madonna's right arm; his legs are crossed one above the other; the whole of the left arm follows the bend of the body and the left hand rests upon the right leg; at the same time, the right shoulder being raised by Mary's hand, the right arm is bent at the elbow and the hand grasps the Virgin's veil.

This attitude, so natural, so true, so unstudied, expresses grandeur and sovereignty. Nothing can be more elementary or powerful.

The light rests calmly upon every part of this beautiful body and all its members in such fine repose. Humanity was never seen under such radiance. The Son of God, in transporting to Heaven the terrestrial form of his infancy, has made it divine for all eternity.

The infant Jesus seems to recoil from the spectacle of human shame; he lovingly presses against the Virgin's breast, softly rests his forehead against his mother's cheek, and darts toward the world one of those flaming and terrible glances at which, it is said, everything in heaven, on earth and in hell trembles. His disordered hair stands upright and quivers in the breath of the tempest, and sombre clouds pass across the widely modelled forehead; the brows are frowning, the pupils dilate and the flame is ready to dart forth; the eyes, profound and terrible, are preparing to flash with lightning; they still withhold it, but we feel that it may break forth, and we tremble. This glance is truly splendid; it fascinates you, attracts you, and, at the same time, fills you with terror.

For every man and woman there is the highest teaching in this painting.

Let women learn from it that there is one glory above all others, motherhood, giving to the world a child to help in the world's work and fight against the sin and the sorrow of ignorant humanity. And let women learn from this picture how beautiful and how perfect is absolute simplicity.

Absolutely simple is the beautiful costume that Raphael gives to the mother.

The hair, a light chestnut, is arranged simply, as women should arrange their hair, seeking to give expression to the soul.

The forehead, the ears, the cheeks and the temples are left completely uncovered in this perfect painting. There is no artifice. It is PERFECT BEAUTY unspoiled by any THOUGHT OF SELF.

Beautiful as is the figure of St. Barbara at the right, it is a figure decorated, the hair and clothing lacking the wonderful simplicity of the Virgin's dress.

Men can learn from this picture from the expression of earnestness and reverence in the face of St. Sixtus what their attitude toward women should be.

Earnestness, fervor, reverence are in the face, the hands and the kneeling figure of the Pope, clad in a white rochet tied by a girdle with golden tassels, a pallium woven with gold and a chasuble lined with red enveloping his shoulders and arms. A white tiara with a triple crown is placed on the balustrade at the foot of the picture.

It is a magnificent picture of an earnest man.

His emaciated face is full of ardor and power; his eyes penetrate straight into the splendor of God; and his mouth, although partially hidden by the gray beard that covers the power part of his face, is praying with extraordinary fervor.

His gesture, so resolute and respectful, is in itself an act of love and charity, and his very hands have their special eloquence. It seems impossible that the Divine Justice will not allow itself to be swayed by such intercession.

This greatest painting of a child and mother that the world knows is said to have come to Raphael as a sudden and complete inspiration. There exists no preliminary drawing, sketch or plan of the picture. The whole vision was formed in the painter's mind as he looked out from his pillow, and saw the painting complete, the Virgin walking on the clouds, carrying her beautiful and majestic son in her arms.

In this picture there is material for many years of study and contemplation.

Happy those that can learn and apply even part of the lesson that the picture conveys.

For two hundred and thirty-six years this (Sixtine madonna) remained in the possession of the Monks of St. Sixtus and every day during the two hundred and thirty-six years divine service was held before the picture.

It was in front of this painting that Correggio, the great artist, realizing the grandeur of his profession, cried, "And I also, I am a painter."

In 1734 the monks of St. Sixtus sold the painting for about twenty thousand dollars to Augustus III, elector of Saxony and King of Poland.

It could not be bought for twenty millions today. Augustus took the picture to Dresden where it is now and received it with royal honors, as well he might, in the reception hall of his palace.

In that great hall the throne occupied the place of honor. The King seated the royal chair, ordered it pushed aside, crying, "Room for the great Raphael."

In the centuries that have passed many have found inspiration in this great work.

Now the marvelous science of photography and other forms of reproduction duplicate great paintings perfectly. And where this picture in the past has delighted thousands, it will delight tens of millions in the ages that are to come.

NEW VOICE IS HEARD FROM ORANGE RANKS

Indicates a change in the Orange ranks. The new voice is heard from the ranks of the Orange Order.

By G. O'CONNELL GILVIN

The Orange Order, a fraternal organization of Irish descent, has long been known for its loyalty to the British crown and its opposition to Irish nationalism. In recent years, however, a new voice has been heard from within the ranks of the Order, one that is more sympathetic to the Irish people and their struggles for independence. This new voice is being heard in the form of a new journal, the "Orange Order Review," which was recently published in New York City. The Review is edited by a young man named John J. O'Connell, who is a member of the Orange Order and a well-known Irish nationalist. The Review is a monthly publication, and it contains articles, news, and opinions on a wide variety of subjects, including Irish politics, Irish literature, and Irish history. The Review is a very interesting and informative publication, and it is a must-read for anyone who is interested in Ireland or the Irish people. The Review is a very important contribution to the Irish nationalist movement, and it is a very welcome addition to the literature of the Irish people.

BASS POINT TAKES THE ACID TEST, SAYS MR. NICK YOUNG

The Shrewd Buyer of Reckless Recreation can't afford to turn his back on the Frivolous Sights of this Seaside Resort, says the Eminent Dramatic Critic, and Mr. Irad Hewes of Melrose, who has studied the Problem from Eastport to Woods Hole, Agrees with him.

Capt. Sweetser Bemoans Passing of Those Good Old Tin Types—Remember Them.

By NICHOLAS YOUNG.

CONSIDERED only as an investment in fun, the shrewd buyer of reckless recreation can hardly afford to turn his back upon the frivolous sights at Bass Point. It is not every amusement resort on the coast that looks fresh and turning on the morning after a perilous night. The morning view is the acid test, and that Irad Hewes of Melrose, who has studied the problem from Eastport to Woods Hole, declares that Bass Point is as solid and substantial at 7 a. m. as at 9 p. m. While it is a tribute worthy of an oak frame and a rare compass hanging place in the Town Hall. Besides, Bass Point is built on a ledge. Even to the shrewdest eyes Bass Point does so unimpeachably that not found anywhere in Massachusetts bay—there is no limit to its offerings. As Irad Hewes remarked, Bass Point is the real headquarters for bathing and beer, pin money and picnicking.

All of which gives Bass Point a variety that is unique when enumerated by men of impracticable nature.

Those Deceptive Pictures.

The expedition that moved upon Bass Point last Wednesday was headed by Jaws Moynihan, the celebrated Colorado critic, who announced that after a season of well-measured disappointment he felt assured that some reward would be found in an afternoon of the trip down the bay from Otis wharf. Jaws Moynihan, a literary expert, who made the trip with Mr.

was overwhelming. It came in a steady stream from every quarter of the place and lasted long after the lights were put out and the police also took up for the night.

It was said to believe that Capt. Jaws Sweetser was right when he said that Wednesday was a quiet day at Bass Point. Capt. Sweetser is the photographer who makes you take seventeen postal cards for $1 a dozen, so your friends at home may see you at your worst, and still believe that you are losing the simple life. There is much in Capt. Sweetser's picture that indicates how close to vicious living his studio is built.

Capt. Sweetser couldn't think the days of his trip are gone forever. "It's a damned shame, too," he added, "because the trip is a permanent reminder of the old days that will hang over you as you grow old and forgotten, while these few faded photographs on postal cards fade away in a hour."

You know, said Capt. Sweetser, "I've seen 'takin' pictures' come here for 32 years, and I've seen the old place down a hill—except I don't get photographed as much as they used to. And that's because the trip has gone out of style."

It may have been a dull day at Bass Point, but you would never suspect it from the crowd on the General Lincoln or from the nervous excitement all along the coasting midway that requests the steamboat landing with the boxes.

They were reminded that many of the joys of Bass Point are found on the trip down the bay from Otis wharf. Jaws Moynihan, a literary expert, who made the trip with Mr.

Moynihan, called attention to the drink on the boat. "There isn't another boat in the harbor service that carries its own musician," said Mr. Moynihan, as a few stray notes in "The Pink Lady" drifted toward us from the forward deck.

"It's good music, too," declared Moynihan, who claimed to be a critic of sea-going melody.

It's a generous steamship company that provides its passengers with an orchestra, but we feared that it couldn't have been an extremely expensive venture because the first rich man who wandered about the decks looking a large man, Moynihan contributed 10 cents to the cause of music and said it was worth it.

The General Lincoln was steered slowly from the shore of Otis Island. "Look at the soldiers," said Mr. Moynihan as the steamers passed the boat.

Mr. Moynihan corrected the literary expert.

General Manager Sherman of the Naugatuck line joined the party as we passed Big Light. He proved to be the right man in the right place, for a steward followed him with a galley or so of lemonade. "This is better than beer," said Moynihan.

"Oh, I don't know," came words from Mr. Loane.

It was some time after we landed that Captain Sweetser informed us that Wednesday was a dull day, but we knew he must be wrong.

What the distinguished Colorado artist, Mr. Moynihan, saw at Bass Point.

Before we left the wharf we were attracted to the center of a promenade, dressed in perfect fashion, who rushed to the edge of the landing and plunged into the sea. It seemed his smart clothing drooping, but we could see that he was trying to be a hero, for he swam straight toward us, struggling in the water.

Thrilling Sea Rescue.

"I'll save you," shouted the young man, who had been swimming and was now on the edge of the water. The young man landed his swim on the wharf and redoubled his efforts.

"Good gracious," exclaimed Moynihan, "it's a rescue, the kindest of men. I never would have thought he was a life saver."

He never seemed to be having any difficulty with the man he had rescued. The rescued man didn't appear to be grateful.

"What do you mean by pulling me out of the water?" shouted the man. "You know who I am? Well, I'm Moynihan, the life guard, and I paid it a day to swim around here and save people from drowning. I'm a professional swimmer."

"Good," was all Hewes could say. "I must be a dumb fool."

And you were told that Wednesday was a dull day.

There was an unusual noise on the Midway as we approached that select portion of Bass Point. "It sounds like a shooting affair," said Moynihan. It was.

The Relay House shooting gallery was filled with smoke and profanity. It was almost pitiful to watch Judge D. H. Schiff of Boston shoot at the day pipes—and miss them. Schiff is also a literary chap and, as we discovered, a friend of Mr. Loane.

"I've spent $435 and haven't hit anything yet," whined Schiff.

"Why we change targets," suggested Loane, pointing to the image of a beautiful lady far in the background. A sign beneath the lady informed us that she was the Countess Julia.

"I think I could hit her," said Schiff. "I'll aim at her heart."

But it was not Judge Schiff's shooting day. His hand trembled, and the sign beneath the lady informed us that she was the Countess Julia.

"I think I could hit her," said Schiff. "I'll aim at her heart."

But it was not Judge Schiff's shooting day. His hand trembled, and the sign beneath the lady informed us that she was the Countess Julia.

ladies' orchestra," remarked Moynihan. He explained his attitude by saying that the notes on the bass horns were weak. "The female lungs," he explained, "never could fill a bass horn."

It was merely another demonstration of the trained ear of the Colorado artist.

It is refreshing to report that Hewes, the life saver, retained our merry group. He had borrowed a dry suit from a water who was having an afternoon off, and while he lacked some of the distinguishing marks that always set him a notch or two higher than any man of his age in the show business, he conferred to feeling reasonably comfortable.

We made easy progress toward the rocks on the ocean side, which, we had been told, commanded a fair view of the sea. Then say spot on the coast.

Frank Kesser, who owns a hotel, watched us suspiciously as we crossed his lawn. He had his eye on Hewes, "Is that water with you folks," he asked.

We happened to explain, and Hewes was permitted to remain.

"You see," said Mr. Kesser, "we do not allow our water on the coast of the house."

It was only fair to Mr. Kesser and Heroic and Thrilling Rescue at Sea One of the Day's Sights.

the reputation of his hotel that we depart quickly, taking Hewes with us. Hewes may be a hero, and he certainly did make a bold plunge into the ocean, but as man looks like a Napoleon in a water suit, when our friends at the Bass Point Hotel, where we succeeded in hiding Hewes behind a post. Here we found Andrew G. Fuller up to his elbows in his new cabaret. Mr. Fuller is the first attempt to venture upon the coast beyond of Bass Point.

It was plain that Mr. Fuller has the right idea—his tales revealed the heavy profits found in later when mixed with cabaret entertainment.

His smile is doubtless a permanent arrangement by this time.

By this time the selection of Naugatuck began to turn out the street lights. The last boat had left for Boston.

No Letup in Recreation.

The streets grew gradually dark, but indoor recreation continued at furious pace all along the trip.

"It is not the old days," sighed Mr. Loane, who recalled the picture of his boyhood at Bass Point, where the Sunday school, from Wakefield journeyed there in harness and behaved with well directed propriety. Yet he confessed that he had so desire to vision in the Bass Point of his childhood.

Out of the still, dark night we could hear the popping of corks from many directions, accompanied by the steady strains of the softly flowing—lager.

It reminded you again that Bass Point is the playground for the multitude—that the variety is overwhelming, and that the police department is well trained and safety is bed when the lights are out.

They also look up the department at 11:30.
